GUIDANCE

Delete the present paragraph and substitute the following

I. Academic Guidance

This takes several forms. The entire faculty is on call for guidance at registration, both for upperclassmen and incoming freshmen, and for specialized guidance relating to graduate schools and careers, with each member concentrating on his own area. The Office of the Registrar advises as to course and major requirements, sequences, and schedules. The Office of the Dean offers intensive personal guidance to probationary and other special students, as well as to regular students whose problems cover more than one area or who have special difficulties. Personal academic guidance is also available in many subjects, such as English and Speech, where private conferences are an integral part of coursework.

II. Vocational Guidance

Activities in this area include:

- 1) Administering aptitude, intelligence, and interest tests. The results are then analyzed for and with each student individually.
- 2) Guiding students in the choice of vocational and educational goals. Freshmen are interviewed as a matter of course while upperclassmen are strongly urged, especially in their junior year, to avail themselves of this service.
- 3) Setting up career conferences with outstanding practicing professionals.
- 4) Collecting information on scholarships and fellowships available for graduate study.
- 5) Administering the Freshman Orientation Program.

III. Personal and Psychological Guidance

Professional personnel help students with psychological problems that interfere with study programs or with proper functioning in college. They also administer such tests as are necessary to diagnose situations as a prelude to psychological guidance. A psychiatrist is available on referral.

IV. Residence Hall Guidance

The Director of Residence Halls conducts interviews with every dormitory resident, paying particular attention to adjustment to dormitory life and the meeting and solving of social problems. He is aided by a dormitory counseling staff of senior and graduate students whose main concern is the day-to-day study, social, and recreational needs of residence hall students.
