

CIA Scandal Hits Yeshiva Ex-UN Emissary Rabinowitz Hamevaze Seen As Link Now Pacifies Yeshiva's Feuds

By Luke Inz

The recent furor created by the Central Intelligence Agency's financial support of non-political groups, caused this reporter to investigate possible CIA activity on campus.

After an exhaustive study, it was found that a student activity had indeed been involved in clandestine operations. The activity in question is the HAMEVAZE, a student religious publication.

The first clue to this sinister plot concerned the question of funds. Since the paper does not receive support from YC Student Council or from EMSCS, it was obvious that outside help was necessary. This reporter could think of no rational person or group who would support the paper and so it was assumed that only the CIA would offer financial assistance.

The question then was: how did the CIA benefit from the publication HAMEVAZE? The answer came through the help of a noted cryptologist. The expert spent four days and nights deciphering all the typographical errors in the last four issues of the paper. He produced a number of messages of international importance which cannot be reprinted here for obvious security reasons.

The editor of the publication was not available for comment, but his governing board who work quite closely with him convened for an emergency meeting. After

Father Divine Heirs Buy A YU Seminary

By Titus Wad

Norman B. Abrams announced today that the religious division formally known as the Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary (RIETS) has been changed to the Father Divine School of Inspiration and Soul Searching (FDSISS). The change of name took place following a large donation, rumored to be in the area of $267.23, in memory of the late Father Divine by his followers.

"The school will maintain its former practices," said Mr. Abrams in an exclusive interview, "and its affairs will be handled as smoothly as in the past. Attendance will be taken every eight minutes during the eight hour sessions."

In commenting on the change, the FDSISS administration pointed out the proud history of the Yeshiva since its founding in the 19th century and remarked how proud the founders would be today on hearing the exciting news.

and hour-long debate, the following statement was made to the press: "No comment."

By V. Cong

One member of our administration, Dean Jacob Rabinowitz, has a widespread reputation as a pacifier. In his little publicized previous position as Assistant to the Secretary General of the UN, he often made attempts to smother controversy at the expense of the organization's sovereign members.

While doing research in the UN archives, our investigator stumbled upon the following unpublished letter which was written the day before he was dismissed from his position.

The letter was written during a period when The New York Times and the Hanoi People's Daily were engaged in a long range polemical dispute. The letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Sulzberger:

I am writing to you and Mr. Ho Chi Minh, and through you, to your respective governing boards, to express my deep concern over recent events which have turned, or are threatening to turn, your two excellent newspapers into scandal sheets. There is certainly room in a newspaper for full, tasteful discussion of divergent issues and ideas. But, there is no room for personal vilification or retribution. The interplay of charge and counter charge besmirches all who participate in it and resolves nothing.

Let us, therefore, halt this degrading spectacle and to those who feel that the truth has not yet been served, let me, as a reasonably objective observer, state the following for the record:

I believe that the explanation given by Mr. Ho Chi Minh, involving errors of commission and omission, is logical and reasonable. I do not believe that there was malicious intent in the recent guerilla raids, and Mr. U-Thant has expressed similar sentiments. I further believe that Mr. Ho Chi Minh's attempt to apologize in the pages of The New York Times was evidence of good faith.

I am also convinced that the news story of the General Assembly censure resolution and the headline which accompanied it were honestly conceived and written. If there is a bias, I believe it to be an unconscious one, the price one pays for involvement. I further believe that the willingness of Mr. Sulzberger to change the wording of the headline, a resolve stymied by the printer's schedule, showed evidence of good faith.

As one who bears responsibility for international affairs, I present the above for your earnest consideration. Let it stand as the final record and let us return to those high standards of journalism to produce newspapers which kindle pride in craftsman and reader alike.

Jacob Rabinowitz,

Rabbi Besdin Volunteers To Take Charge Of Danciger Campus Dollar Sign Statue

By Hy Price

The other day, as I was strolling about rolling Danciger Campus, my mind suddenly hit upon the final solution to the Yeshiva problem, the one simple idea that would give Yeshiva the class it needs to stay among Washington Heights' top five colleges. My brilliant notion was to erect a mammoth statue of a dollar sign in the center of Danciger Campus. This would give visitors a capsule idea of Yeshiva's ultimate goal and give the college campus something to be noted for.

I decided to poll my brainstorm among several university officials and students:

Director of JSS: "Ba-si-cal-ly, the idea is not feasible, impractical, villainous, and I'll be happy to take complete charge of the project."

YC Registrar: "Simply fill out Form M916, 'Application for Dollar-Sign Statues.'"

Average RIETS student: "My rebbe says it's asur, but not to quote him."

Director of Residence Halls: "Uh, how tall would it be?"

Director of Maintenance: "When do we start waxing the base?"

Assistant to the President: "Ah, yes, such an edifice would make a fine addition to our noble seat of learning!"

Well, after hearing such unan-

Bacon Says "Assasination Of Jacob Rabinowitz" Best Play

The Dean's Reception was once again held this year at the Statler Hilton and, as usual, went smoothly and was a great success. President and Mrs. Johnson, the Richard Burtons, the Beatles, Joe Berlin, and J. D. Salinger were only a few of the many celebrities in attendance. The crowd was estimated at between two and fifteen thousand.

After the seven course dinner, the sophomore and junior class plays were presented with leading roles played by Peter Sellers, Michael, Caine, and Sean Connery. Dean Isaac Bacon presented the giant gold trophy to the junior class for its winning production of "The Persecution And Assasination Of Jacob Rabinowitz As Performed By The Inmates Of The Asylum Of Yeshiva University Under The Direction Of THE COMMENTATOR Governing Board." Following the plays, the large crowd moved to the Main Ballroom where they were entertained by such notables as Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass and the ever-popular Lawrence Welk Orchestra.

The evening's great success was attributed to clear, calm planning and to the wonderful cooperation of everyone involved.

The two student newspapers of YC, The Commentator and Hamevaze, have decided to pool their talent for next year. The combined paper will appear as The Common-Ham. Dean Bacon, with much at stake in a strong student voice, has come out in favor of The Common-Ham, but has asked that it accept the students from making mincemeat out of the administration with every student beef.

imous accolades, I was ready to implement my idea — but, alas, one YU bureaucrat found in the annals of some large donor's will that "no statue depicting anything whatsoever (except my mother in the event that she may marry) shall be erected at the College or funds will be withdrawn." With the realization that the real thing is truly more important than its symbol, I walked on to class, a bit dismayed, but happy with the knowledge that my college would sacrifice revolutionary ideas rather than sink into the depths of poverty.

Leo Announces "Short Change" Cafeteria Policy

University officials have announced a major change in Yeshiva College cafeteria operations. The cafeteria manager, Mr. Leo Fullowits, summarized the innovations as follows:

1) Due to the large increase in the number of students fasting on Monday and Thursday, the cafeteria will not serve breakfast on those days.

2) Due to the influx of students utilizing cafeteria facilities from the Belfer Graduate School, a special section of the cafeteria will be opened where only tarfus will be served.

3) A system of chance will from now on be used in the cashier area. At the beginning of each serving day, one of the two cashiers will secretly be designated the "short change cashier." Whoever pays this cashier will have to make allowance for a slightly larger food budget for the day. Mr. Fullowits explained that this plan will stir interest in cafeteria operations and help eradicate what he called the "student's apathy toward food."

Letters To The Editor

To the Editor:

After reading your last issue, I was appalled at discovering that the most coveted office in the school — the presidency of student council — was sought by only one candidate. In a democracy such as ours, it is a clear sign of apathy when someone runs unopposed. The elected representative is the servant of the people and he is the one who must carry out their wishes, with little personal regard for his own welfare. I hope you will take note of this country's fine representatives and outstanding leaders, and that their shining examples will cause a greater interest in your own student activities.

Biminally yours,
Adam Clayton Powell

Pat On Back

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank THE COMMENTATOR for the excellent coverage which it gave to my series of lectures on Medical Ethics. In particular, I would like to single out as an example of journalism at its highest pinnacle, the article about my lecture in your January 5 edition. It reflects well on the quality of work done by your news, typing, and copy staffs. Keep up the good work.

Halachically yours,
Dr. Moses D. Tenderly

Mission Impossible

To the Editor,

I am an Orthodox Jew with a problem. After graduating college, I eagerly accepted a position offered at the Albert Einstein School of Medicine. However, I was compelled to leave when I refused to work on the Sabbath and was forced into one of the few fields where one can remain a shomer mitzvot — show business. As things stand now, though, I will soon be leaving Hollywood and plan to live in New York. My problem is this: I would like to pursue a new career in science but desire an orthodox, shomer shabbos environment. Do you have any suggestions?

Religiously yours,
Steven Hill

Editor's note: Would you believe Belfer?

The Lucky 13

There is a little known group of dedicated and devoted students in this school whose altruistic services are, for the most part, taken for granted. They spend many hours each week totally unnoticed, diligently working for the benefit of the students. Members of this group are resigned to the fact that pleasure and relaxation has no part in their college life. Although rarely praised and often criticized, they persevere untiringly to fulfill their duties.

And who are these gallant men? In all due modesty, we can't tell you.

High Hopes

The duties of the Director of Residence Halls are considered by many to be so monumental that only a giant could handle them. To lighten some of the burden, we suggested last year that a Dean of Men be brought in to help out by meeting the incoming freshmen and discussing their problems, etc. This suggestion was acted upon and was so successful that it has backfired;

the Director of Residence Halls now has nothing to do.

We propose that, for his hard work well done in that past, Rabbi Highfists be given a Herman Wouk Sabbatical which would allow him to pursue many of the intellectual and creative interests which he has had to neglect in the past.

Gesheft

It has come to our attention that a member of the Office of Student Finances has been acting in a way unbefitting his position. Mr. Gary Kornspan has been in charge of Work-Study and Urban Corps for over a year and has never been the subject of an editorial.

Any administrator who is understanding, thoughtful, efficient, and looks out for the student's welfare has no place in this University.

We therefore suggest that Mr. Kornspan research the possibility of transferring to a school where his efficiency will be less incongruous with general administrative practices.

Stern Advice

Dear Jake,

I am a newly appointed official at Yeshiva College and need your guidance. I have to be a "good guy" to the students and to the administration. I have to keep a perpetual smile on my face and be constantly sweet and understanding. I have to make deals and compromises and have to keep all my promises. Well, I'm just fed up with the whole thing! I am sick of being stepped on and ordered around by the administration. I'm sick of being yelled at all the time by student leaders. What can I do?

The Pacifist

Dear Pacifist,

Have you ever considered transferring to Stern?

Remedy

Dear Jake,

I am in a terrible rut and need a change. I have been performing magic tricks and teaching hygiene for too long. Please make me a suggestion.

Doc

Dear Doc,

POOF!—you're a suggestion!

C What U Get

Dear Jake,

My problem is that students at Yeshiva seem to dislike me, and now I just can't live with myself. I admit to having failed students for writing their Hebrew finals in pencil and for beginning their test booklets from the front, and I even admit to having prided myself with failing a pre-med student a few years ago. But on the whole, I go by the laws and am a very consistent marker. My heart aches every time I see the hatred of my students for me. What can I do?

Captain Hook

Dear Captain Hook,
Try holding your breath and counting to a thousand.

Dear Jake,

I have been teaching at the same school for over twenty years and am being persecuted because my academic advancement has hardly progressed. I can't understand this. I am quiet, calm, well-mannered and at all times a gentleman. Being a rabbi, I am well qualified to set an example for the modern Orthodox Jew in America.

I have had enough of this %#@$. What in the %#@* world does the %#@* have against me? What the %#@* should I do?

Persecuted Vulgariernter

Dear Persecuted,
Don't take this lying down — make your presence felt. Try raving and ranting in class and be sure to check for spies.

PROFESSOR EXPOSED

Bananas Finds Yeshiva Stimulating Lists Two Main Contributing Assets

Miss Bananas of Home Economics Department displays her wares.

By Sal Carvel
"What can I do for you, big boy?" began my interview with the friendly newcomer, to the home economics department at Yeshiva,

Miss Chiquita Bananas. A graduate of San Juan Training School for Girls, now working on an advanced degree here in New York, Miss Bananas finds teaching at Yeshiva "quite stimulating, especially the evening classes."

Although she presently instructs a beginner's class on Mondays and Wednesdays, and teaches advanced courses on Tuesdays and Thursdays, Miss Bananas hopes to enlarge the department more in the near future. She has done an admirable job enlarging it so far. A resident of Manhattan, Miss Bananas listed stamp collecting and weight lifting as her favorite hobbies but was quick to point out that her one great love is teaching the finer arts of home economics. She insists that the satisfaction one derives from implanting something in others — for that is the learning process itself — cannot be appreciated by most laymen. Commenting on her great success and popularity at Yeshiva, Miss Bananas remarked that it was especially rewarding teaching here because most students had seemed so concerned with the double program that they had often neglected home economics. She feels that a close student-teacher relationship is essential and her students readily agree. Another of her attributes is that she is always ready to give of herself and has been known to conduct after-hours meetings with individual students, often lasting into the wee hours of the morning.

In closing, Miss Bananas proudly pointed out that her classes are the largest in the school and cited her two main assets (kindness and care) as factors. We at Yeshiva agree — wholeheartedly!

YUPR Hired To Change Image Of Vita Herring

In keeping with the expansion program of YU's involvement in the general Jewish community, the office of Public Relations has entered into the field of commercial Jewish advertising.

It was announced yesterday that a contract was signed with the Vita Herring Corporation of Williamsburg. After a number of attempts at a suitable poster design that would attract the appropriate clientele, the following result was submitted: a multicolored poster of a bearded scholar bent over an ancient tome of Talmud, one shriveled hand pointing to a tosfot and the other happily waving a chunk of Vita creamed herring on a well-used toothpick. Underneath the Madison Avenue caption reads the legend: The Vita Corporation is the oldest and largest pickled herring manufacturer under Jewish auspices. Founded in 1886 under the philosophy of synthesis between herring and cream sauce, the company devotes itself to the furtherance of traditional "Yiddish-fishkeit."

The widely acclaimed success of this campaign has brought numerous billing requests from many substantial advertisers. Sources within Public Relations have disclosed that their next campaign will push the "Dual Programmed-Hebrew and English Computer" of one of the nation's smaller data processing firms.

Impartial Marshall Is Hanged By Dormers King Blazing Jacob's New Vizier Eliminated

The leader of a recent archeological expedition through the catacombs of 186 St. and Amsterdam Ave. has reported the discovery of a long hidden scroll containing the following story. A synopsis of that story written by the eminent author Mordecai HaYehudi follows.

Once upon a time in the ancient Kingdom of Built Grounds lived a King known as Blazing Jacob. He was a mighty and powerful ruler who was feared by all his subjects. One time, he became dissatisfied with his vizier, Shinning Rock, and he removed him from his position.

In his place he appointed a new vizier, Impartial Marshall. The new vizier had an all consuming hatred for a certain group of the King's subjects. King Blazing Jacob trusted his new vizier and thus was easily bamboozled into giving him the Royal Stamp of Authority. Upon gaining control of this all powerful source of authority, Impartial Marshall immediately set out to destroy the victims of his wrath. He began by suspending some of their most valuable and long cherished liberties.

When the Dormers, for that was the name of this group, heard of these new regulations, they declared a day of fasting and prayer for deliverance from this evil.

At this time, the King had just taken a new wife. It happened that this woman was the niece of the spokesman of the Dormers, Yeshiva Bochor. This niece, the warm and lovely Sterno came to the King and begged the King to set her people free from this horrible set of discriminatory laws. The King wanted to grant her wish, but he was unable to because any laws that were enacted with the Royal Stamp of Authority could not be rescinded. In order to help the Dormers overcome his unsuspectedly vicious appointee, the King permitted them to openly defy the regulations and fight anyone who tried to enforce them.

The Dormers were now in a good position because they lived in three compact sections of the city and could easily fight off any invaders. Evasion of the regulations was the first part of their plan to bring about the ultimate downfall of Impartial Marshall.

To protect their valuable pictures and avoid taking them off the walls, they covered them with colorful floor to ceiling tapestries. Filched pieces of Royal silverware and china were wrapped in plastic covers during use, while appliances were stored in the building halls so that inspectors would not know to whom they belonged. To facilitate the easy and safe use of these appliances, the Dormers acquired long extension cords to bring power in from outside and use the appliances without being detected. Many other dodges, such as eliminating all garbage cans — something the building owners were only too happy to do, were employed. This measure was later to be of great importance.

These counter measures could only bring the dispute to a standstill. Neither side prevailed. The issue was resolved when the King discovered some service that Yeshiva Bochor had rendered him, some service that he had thought that Impartial Marshall had done. When he discovered this, he immediately sent for Impartial Marshall and told him to lead Yeshiva Bochor through the streets on a white horse. Impartial Marshall did this to the great joy of all the Dormers. At this point, the Dormers, who you remember no longer had garbage cans, were up to their ears in garbage and put it to good use. The vizier was greeted by a hail of garbage. Naturally not all of the garbage found its correct mark but that was unavoidable. The Dormers were only too happy to let go on him.

Impartial Marshall's end came when King Blazing Jacob told Yeshiva Bochor to hang the vizier from the top of the nearest seven story Dormer residence hall. Needless to say, this was done with alacrity. For a time Yeshiva Bochor was at a loss for what to use for the rope, this was resolved when he saw a very tall Dormer in the building who was still using his extension cord. He took the cord and with the supreme irony hanged Impartial Marshall with it.

Since that day, the communal authorities have decreed that every year at this time this story is to be read in every Dormer residence hall. The purpose of this is to demonstrate to the people that eternal vigilance is necessary to deter new tyrants from withdrawing their newly won right to use public power without a charge.

Blackmen Conquer Elis; Dr. Devine Burned Out

The Eli's Elis suffered a stunning (120-45) defeat last week at the hands of the Universal Torah Blackmen. The embarrassment was compounded by the fact that it occurred in the grossly overcrowded Eli's Organic Gym.

Many commentators at the game felt that the defeat was caused by an adverse reaction to the elements of the teaching methods of the Elis' head coach, Dr. Devine. The major criticisms were that he makes his team memorize too many plays and that they spend too much time just regurgitating them back to him; the players have no time to try them out on the court. Another fault lies in his refusal to hire an assistant coach to teach some of the Organic players which would give him more time to use his formidable talents on a smaller number of players.

The results of Dr. Devine's policies were evident on court when his players were unable to move around because they were up too late memorizing plays. The Blackmen were naturally quite jubilant over their victory and attributed it to their coach.

Their return to UTB's rolling campus on a bluff overlooking the Scarlum River in historic Laurel Woods was marked by a great outburst of joy from among the local fans. A homecoming celebration that lasted most of the night was held on top of the bluff. The local maskilim spent most of the night eating well dunned bacon and eggs. Among the celebrities who attended were the ever vigilant guard of the local study hall; a well known immigrant from the Orient; the great compromiser; the great miser; the big boss; one certain well, larded administrator; and a highly touted, often unreliable, and totally ineffective guidance person.

At the same time on the Eli's Organic campus, the players were burning Dr. Devine (and not in effigy). One team member was quoted as having said "burn baby burn." The burning was a total success, and the members were overjoyed by the end of sleepless nights. The team is presently dickering with the coach of the Blackmen to come to Eli's Organic to take Dr. Devine's place.

Howard Bodner

It was Purim. Gathered in the new Yeshiva College Field House (I said it was Purim) were Yeshiva's four renowned coaches. All had the wonderful gaze of imperance upon their idyllic faces.

The conversation centered around each man's boast that his athletic prowess and sports acumen was universal. Each felt competent to compete in any of the Yeshiva athletic activities.

Saracheck began ranting about his expertise in tennis. Since tennis is the gentleman's sport, Saracheck has a natural affinity for it.

He confidently marched on the court bedecked in tennis attire and carried a new racket, purchased from Sam Stern, play commenced as Saracheck adroitly swished each shot through the net. Somewhat perturbed, he bellowed, "Balls!" Not misunderstanding the cry, Kelsey, the ball boy, supplied Red with a new can.

As the game progressed, Saracheck constantly disputed the referee's calls — to no avail. Discouraged because he was not able to get the proper spin on the ball, Saracheck benched himself. The final score, 60 (game)—15 against.

Saracheck smashes ball into net.

Perhaps he is as successful in one sport as in another.

Eli Epstein was the next to perform. Healthy and vigorous from his Grossinger vacation, he began warming up for his wrestling debut. Epstein had imbibed a mite too much, as he imagined that he was in Israel. So out of it was he, that he could not even recognize his players or remember their names. Obviously this was only a slight case of amnesia caused by the Purim atmosphere.

Epstein was really quite good as he smashed his opponent to the mat. He almost lost a few points on a foot fault as he kicked his adversary in the head. The climax of the match was reached as Epstein confused the sports. Due to the unpredictable positions in which a wrestler may find himself, Epstein believed the match was over when he had his foe making love.

The final exhibition of the dexterity of the coaches was displayed as Wittenberg and Tauber's basketball teams battled for use of the gym. The very appearance of each coach added inspiration to the team, as Wittenberg resembled Wayne Embry, and Tauber, Darrel Imhoff.

Each coach gave instructions to his respective players. Wittenberg shouted: "Milty shoot, Milty shoot. You can's score by standing there." Tauber softly called out: "Sid, lunge for the ball. Jack, play the riposte."

As is normal, the coaches were elated when the teams tallied points. The Wittenbergs scored on a 3 point play, and a fine reversal. The Taubermen relied on their fine touch.

Epstein serves up level-ly set leading to smashing victory.

Suddenly, each coach awakened to reality. They weren't in a new field house, but down at Power Memorial. And as they walked, bleary-eyed from the gym, they glanced back and thought they saw Haman hanging from the wall.
