How Do I Eat Thee? Let Me Count the Calories

by Hannah Frechter

On a Thursday night, or should we say, Friday morning, at 3:00 a.m., after all the "meat" was inspected and all the midnight snackers had gone upstairs to sleep, a great explosion took place in the vending-machine room in the dorm. It all started when NESTLE's CHOCOLATE bar decided that his chocolate could lite up more if allowed some exposure to the air. Longing to escape from the confinement of the machine, all the candy bars joined together to work out a plan of escape. They wanted to go up to the rooms and release their big T's of temptation so that no diets would be able to run them out of business.

Cheered by the Hershey's Rolly bar and BABY RUTH the CHOCOLATE BAR summoned a conference. It was decided that the HERSCHE's with almonds and the NESTLE's CRUNCH could together break open the quarter changer to release the money which would release the candy bars. There was to be no KIT KATTING around.

All the candies went NUTS about their ideas. The CHOCOLITE, who was the PLANTER of it all, encouraged the PEANUT BLOCK to help break open the machine. As soon as they were released from bondage, the little troublemakers woke up the few remaining cakes, brownies, and cookies. A note was sent to the ice creams who had to be barred from the conference because of their dependency on freezing temperatures. They were to be released when it was time for the journey of temptations.

Only the apples, the chewing gum and the diet sodas were left out, for the few that were left could discourage the girls from eating candy and cake. FREEDENT gum felt as though the whole thing was Wrigged and tried to Double the Trouble. But neither her Spears nor her Juicy Fruits Mint anything. It was hopeless. "It's no use, said REESE's PEANUT BUTTER CUP. "When CHOCO-LITE has an idea, be REESURED you can't stop him.

Arrangements were made for the juice and milk to escape, for it was felt that oranges and lemons were a great Ade to the cause. It's always more appetizing to have a drink with a treat.

B. O. Y. Extends Hand to Sisters Begs Girls to Come

(Yeshiva Press International)
(Exclusive to the Absurder)

Determined not to repeat last year's fiasco regarding the Purim Chaggia, B.O.Y. (Bocherim of Yeshiva) held an emergency meeting the night of Feb. 22. All attendance records were broken that night. According to ringside observers (S.C.), it was a pitched battle that could have gone either way.

When the smoke finally cleared over the stuffy room with overturned chairs, few conclusions could be drawn. But the issue closest to the hearts of Sternies was decided. Any female, able to provide identification that she is indeed serving time at Brookdale.

When the smoke finally cleared over the stuffy room with overturned chairs, few conclusions could be drawn. But the issue closest to the hearts of Sternies was decided. Any female, able to provide identification that she is indeed serving time at Brookdale, will be admitted to this exclusive party. To even things out, all males wishing to attend must prove with valid identification, to be inmates of Morgrubneits.

As a special treat, alumni and their spouses will attend to reminisce about the good old days (before the mishigas). (There is absolutely no truth to the rumor that Sternies require ID as good Jewish Maidlach).

SHAPED MAJOR AT. ELAINE POWERS FOR STERN COLLEGE STUDENT BODY

Dean David Moreskin has recently announced that Stern College has completed negotiations with the Elaine Powers Figure Salon at 34th Street and Madison Avenue enabling the student body to participate in a shaped major program. "We of Stern College are weary of being recognized on only one level — the intellectual. As society has progressed, we too have grown and gained much. We must now show the world that Stern College Women have more to offer than their extraordinary minds."

The Salon has shown an increasing interest in the possibility of opening up the program to inter departmental disciplines. The math department will offer a course in conjunction with the program entitled "Problems in Figure Solving." The Biology and

Bible Corner

by H. S. Chayil

A Y.U. boy of valor who can find? (I don't know, but I've been looking for the past four years without any luck.)

For he is worth far more than a free meal at La Differance.

His Stern girl trusts in him

And he never lacks a car on rainy nights.

He brings her good and not harm all the Thursday nights of her life.

He seeks out wool and flax.

And then can a girl into making him a Kippah.

He is like the marchant ships. (Some might argue that he's built more like a Russian tank.)

He brings her food from afar. (On a good night they may even make it to Kosher World.)

He girds himself with strenght

And braces his arms for work. (Any dorm counsellor who's on duty for the late shift can tell you what kind of "work" he uses his arms for.)

He finds that his trade is profitable.

His lamp goes not out until the wee hours of the morning.

His clothing is John's Bargain Store's finest

As he sits among the other rejects in the Blue Lounge.

His mother rises up and blesses him (She's the only one still reading this lousy poem because she's so proud to see his name in print.

And his Stern girl praises him saying:

Many Y.U. boys have tried

But you excell them all.

Charm is deceptive and beauty is vain. (They better be, because you have neither.)

Only a fine boy (when was the last time you went out with one of those girls? I think they died out years ago.) shall be praised.

Give him due credit for his achievement (After 6 months without a date he's still making the weekly trip down to Stern.

Let his own works praise him at the gates of Brookdale Hall.

Presidential Search Ends

We, the Committee to elect a president, after extensive search throughout the four corners of the earth and careful deliberation, have arrived at the pragmatic realization that there exists no one man or woman that could encompass all that SCW represents. So, rather than admit to failure and resort to withdrawal, we have decided to create the perfect president. Since this candidate, in reality, does not exist, we would appreciate your own imagination in completing the picture.

Naturally, the most forthright question in your mind is what our president will look like. So have no fear - we have all but drawn him for you. His height: no taller than Rosenbloom. His weight: no lighter than Perlman. With Feinstein's beret upon Knopka's wig, fastened to Grossman's hair, overlooking Bernstein's eyes, shaded by Koenigsberg's glasses sitting on Bessie's nose, with none other than Berman's beard (?) to finish off the face. For purposes of public relations, our candidate is dressed impeccably - at the risk of drawing attention from the face - in Davidowicz's top button with Sar's bow tie complementing Levy's shirts and Metzger's matching jacket. Just imagine Weiss's legs in Blau's polyester pants held up by Larry the Librarian's belt! For accessories, may we suggest Reich's shoes with Rosenbloom's taps. Davidowicz's jewelry. Harvary's makeup and Robinson's nails.

Though all the other attributes of a president are secondary, nevertheless they are worth mentioning. With Torah and Madah our ideals, we have concocted a creature who could be as evasive as Berman in dealing with pertinent problems, as clear as Krumbin in his explanations, as coherent as Metzger and as totally objective as Remes, who can never remember his past opinions.

Third on our list is the individual's public attention. With this he'll certainly win the hearts of all who come in contact with him. With Mostow's soothing voice, Hecht's conceit and Shurin's post-nasal, Bick's morality and Mirsky's warmth, he's sure to be respected in the highest circles.

And when it comes to menial duties such as press conferences, Gordon's longwindedness, Finkelmann's diplomacy and Perlman's verbal diarrhea (but in good taste) is sure to make him a renowned public figure. As for fundraising, Metzger's "glowing" experience and Bessie's assertiveness will make us the richest institution in the country.

We hereby challenge anyone else to propose a more fitting and more appropriate candidate for this esteemed, well-rounded and complex position.

2. The room was all filled with smoke.
And Helen attempted and spoke,
She coughed and she sneezed
She gasped and she wheezed
And then she proceeded to choke.
3. The boycott was started we learned.
The tempers had flared and burned.
Teachers started to shout
As they lost their bout
For the salaries that they had yearned.
4. The faculty began a trend.
They swore they would not attend.
This prompted Bick
To pull all her shrick
And the students they did offend.
5. A proposal was brought to the floor.
That we should learn "women"

They panted and raved
The proposal was saved
Said Shlomo: Get back in my rib.
7. Colodner and Reich did fight.

Zucker Zoo:

Where Things Are "ARING!"

Zucker Zokt

It's hard to believe that in a school which is as efficient, enjoyable, and perfect as ours, that it has become necessary to write an article pointing to the few problems that are confronting us. But, as mature adults, we must face that fact and remedy the situation before it gets out of hand.

At a recent student council meeting, four girls had to be taken out of the room when they fainted from the heat. Now come on girls — I know that everyone wanted to be at the front so that they could volunteer their help in the various committees, but four hundred girls in the orange lounge pushing to be at the front?

The incident mentioned occurred when the Student Admissions Society requested volunteers to speak at various schools to encourage girls to come here for the best possible college education possible. Suddenly 350 enthusiastic hands went up; and in the melee which followed, the four injured girls were found underneath the 350 people attached to those hands. I realize that the school spirit and loyalty is running high, but I simply cannot condone such action. In the future, the student council executive board will find it necessary to put limitations on the attendance in order to prevent such incidents from continuing.

It has also been brought to the attention of the student council that committees and classes seem to be running a conspiracy to prevent students from doing school work and, worse than that, are keeping students from their TV shows and from patronizing the many sights of New York City. A complaint has been made that with so much excellent programs being offered at Stern, the area movie theatre, shows, and restaurants are suffering. It seems that girls would rather have a date bring them to a school-sponsored function than anywhere else, for fear that they might miss out on something. Also, with a different program being held every day, teachers are complaining that students just aren't doing their work. In keeping with this, the executive board has decided that we will now limit it to five school functioned programs a week. Just remember — the limit of 300 people per program will still be in effect, so get there early if you want to get in!! With your co-operation, we can continue to make this year as exciting and as stimulating as it has been so far.

Write On!

The Staff of the Absurder would commend the U. S. Postal Service for replacing the mailbox on the corner of 34th St. and Lexington. It is an act deserving great praise and thanks from the student body of Stern. Without this familiar blue and red landmark, a student would get lost on the way to school. Or, even worse, she would have nothing to remind her to stop before dashing across Lexington Avenue. Without this mailbox, N.Y. Telephone, Orbach's, Macy's, etc. would not receive payments due to them since nobody would remember to walk to Madison & 34th to drop the checks in the mailbox. So-Aip Aip Aurray for the post-office.

CHOOSE WISELY

1. Your dorm counselor barges into your room as you are using your oven.

A. You tell her that Ralph Nader asked you to try out this new product.

B. You ask her about the Jewish opinion concerning mercy towards one's fellow man.

C. You tell her it is part of a chemistry experiment, whereby you have to collect carbon from a piece of burnt toast.

D. You pretend that the oven is nonexistent and begin discussing the concept of existentialism.

2. Your American Government teacher finds that you are writing a letter during his "gripping" lecture.

A. You tell him that you were motivated by his lecture on the corrupt politics in East Mkeesport, Pennsylvania, and so you are writing a letter to protest.

B. You tell him that you were so excited by his lecture that you are writing down a summary of it to send home.

C. You tell him that blue aerogram-like paper is the newest type of notebook paper.

3. The phone rings and it is a boy in whom you have no interest.

A. You begin talking in a foreign language so he thinks he's reached the wrong country.

B. You say, "Manhattan Police Station," and wait till he hurriedly hangs up.

C. You pretend that you are a recording and say that the number is no longer in service.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE ...

The cafeteria offered hundreds of things to eat for dinner ... beans.

The library remained open one night past 10:00 p.m. ... someone forgot to lock the door.

A male was found above the first floor in the dorm ... the exterminator came the next day to get rid of the cockroaches.

One-hundred Stern girls came to a student-council meeting ... they thought it was a mesibah.

And here's the Chagiga!!

Every month there's bound to be one.

Rumor has it, they're supposed to be fun.

Meet your mate and have a ball.

But we know it isn't that way at all.

Yet every hagiga entices a crowd. Of those who are quiet, and those who are loud.

They gather around the evening's celebrity.

The punch bowl, they drain greedily.

At every hagiga, its members play "the game."

Its rules never change; the members are always the same.

It's called, "how to stare at others without getting caught."

It rarely works, its members are often distraught.

But on and on, the music plays. The students watch, the council pays.

Some left-footed girls attempt to dance.

More accurately, they shlep and prance.

They step all over everyone's toes. How we walk the next day, no one knows.

THE CLASS OF "82"

HELP!

The Saga of the Metal Monsters

X Helen Goldkorn

The food and drink machines in the Stern dorm have definitely developed minds of their own, and like any figure in a position of authority they practice discrimination against us poor unsuspecting Stern students. Once they form an animosity toward you, the process is irreversible. You can stand on your head till you turn blue and do back-walk somersaults but they will not change their opinion about you. You can bid farewell to the chance of ever receiving food, drink, or your money back from those callous hardened metal monsters.

They must have started off the semester liking me, or at least remaining impartial until after they would pass final judgement over me. The first few weeks of the school year, I would gingerly deposit my money and promptly receive my desired food or drink, or else my food would be regurgitated through the coin return slots. Fine, no complaints; what more can you ask for? My mistake, however, was in hanging around the machines for too long a period of time -- long enough, in fact, to see them maltreat other unfortunate girls toward whom their policy of "no service" was already clearly established. It bothered me to see girls deposit money into the soda machine from which I had just received my soda, and get nothing in return. That the machine was, in fact, full became increasingly evident to me as subsequent depositors received their sodas; but about every third person got gipped. Thinking back quickly to my high-school career, I remembered that when our machine would misbehave, a few swift kicks to its bloated stomach were usually sufficient to convince it to regurgitate candy, money, and all kinds of goodies. These Stern machines were a bit larger, but a machine is a machine, I figured. What works for one would work for another!

I bade the others to step aside, and delivered a swift kick to the ribs of the machine. The girls glanced at me in astonishment, as, kick after kick, the sodas came tumbling forth. Next came the coin-changer machine, which gives one the average of 15¢ to the quarter. It was too high off the ground for me to kick, but I figured a punch would serve the same purpose. And it did, for a while. But like all the other money-hungry machines in the room, it soon developed a resistance to me and my cure!

Whereas before I would just lose my money very infrequently, now my chances of ever receiving anything out of the machines are virtually nil. Now it is I who stand back and watch others get soda, ice cream, and candy from the very same machines that two minutes earlier swallowed my money and gave me nothing in return. I would get other girls to deposit coins for me, but even that would not work as long as I remained standing there. Only when I am out of the room and send someone in for me do they sometimes release their goodies. I fear one day they will discover, if they do not already suspect, who my messengers are. They will discover that my roommates are my agents and deny them service as well. I fear that one day in the not-too-distant future . . . I will starve -- help!

Calories ...

Down in the basement, in the little phone booth, the candies called their manufacturers for suggestions. They shed their wrappers and posted them in the elevators for advertisement.

Crowding into the elevators, they proceeded on their journey. Given the job of maintaining quiet so that the guards would not become suspicious, the cakes' creme filling had to cool off the ice creams who were pleading for they had little time before they would melt away.

"Wait and see what will happen to Weight Watchers, Overeaters Anonymous, and Diet Workshop," said the leader. "All their Elaine Powers of conquering temptation will be gone forever. It's time that we won the battle of the bulge."

Did Choco-lite succeed? you anxiously ask. "Well, Stern College had to cancel classes for two weeks in order for the girls to lose enough weight to put on their clothes and fit through their doors. That goes to show that you cannot always guard chocolate and sweets and keep them in their Nestle's. We must, however, try to do our best to prevent the lit from starting any more fires."

Special to the ABSURDER from the OBSERVER

...And you thought you knew it all...

Many people feel that they know everything there is to know about Purim. Every Hebrew school teaches the story and customs of Purim around this time, year after year. But do you know the answers to these questions? Why isn't Hallel recited on Purim? How many blessings are said before the reading of Megillot Esther? Why are the ten sons of Haman mentioned in one long breath? Why do we make noise when Haman's name is read? Why do we eat kreplach on Purim?

All the answers to these questions and other interesting historical material on Purim can be found in Rabbi M. Lehrman's book The Jewish Festival.

Rabbi Lehrman relates in his book that Hallel is not recited on Purim because Rabbis have decided that the reading of the Megillah is sufficient praise and glory to G-d. Also Rabbis have said that Hallel should not be recited over a miracle that occurred outside of Palestine, as Purim did.

There are three blessings said before the Megillah reading. One deals with the commandment of reading the Megillah, another deals with the miracles G-d performed, and another deals with our gratitude for our perservation throughout history.

The ten sons of Haman are said all in one breath to show us that all ten sons suffered the same fate at the same time — death by hanging.

The custom of making noise (stomping feet, grogers, banging) when Haman's name is read can be traced to certain posukim. In Deuteronomy XXV 19 it says "thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek." Rabbi Lehrman also brings from Deut. XXV 2 the passage "Vahayah Im Bin Hakot Harasha." In Hebrew the last letters of the first three words spell Haman, and the last two words mean "smite the wicked one."

It is a custom to eat on Purim Kreplach, which are three cornered dough packets stuffed with meat. The three corners symbolize the three Patriarchs, through whose good merits, our ancestors were saved.

This is just a small sample of the interesting material found in Lehrman's book. If you want to know more about Purim read through the Purim chapter in The Jewish Festivals.
