Welfare Hotels To House Surplus SCW Students

A solution based on a series of surveys has been found to alleviate the already unbearable over-crowding of Brookdale Hall.

Next year, consenting students will have the opportunity to choose between a series of various welfare hotels located up and down 34th street.

The offer, "well over due," says Dean Bacon, "will most definitely improve the already insufferable living conditions found at SCW's Brookdale Hall. "The new accommodations will be thoroughly inspected (for bloody needles and rubber straps) before girls move in, and each room will receive a fresh coat of paint (to cover up the bullet ridden walls)."

The same decorator who refurbished the front lounge at Brookdale Hall has been rehired and will begin work some time in the near future. She has promised to uphold and remain true to the current ambience of the hotels.

"NOT TO WORRY"

Some students have voiced their concerns concerning the types of people who have previously inhabited the rooms. "Not to worry," reassures Mrs. Zekla Braun, director of student disservices. "Every previous inhabitant has undergone a thorough examination conducted by the college's doctor."

The examination, consisting of blood tests and an eye ear, nose and throat culture, was performed on 100 or so residents.

The doctor, in a phone interview, said that most passed with flying colors. There were, however, some exceptions.

"The lady in 5h, for instance, she almost didn't pass my examination. In fact she barely stayed coherent for the length of it. It was tough for me to breathe through the alcoholic fumes emanating from her mouth."

Another couple, living in a suite on the third floor with their 10 children, couldn't be evaluated until their children recovered from infectious pneumonia.

When asked what would be done with these displaced persons, Judy Chicken, director of inadmissions, admitted in an off the record statement, "that if need be, former welfare residents will be temporarily housed in Brookdale Hall." She added, however, that they would not be allowed to purchase food from the Nu-Wave cafe at any time.

The cost of the new additional housing will be dramatically lower for two reasons, said Dean Dullman. First, he said, the lower cost will attract many students and make more room for New York's homeless. Second, he added, parents won't have to pay extra for security.

Stern College Students To Star in Tahari's Next Macy's Window Display

Having made such a tremendous hit last November, the SCW women who modeled Tahari fashions in SCW's Koch Auditorium, have at long last agreed to appear in his upcoming Macy's window display.

"I was so impressed by their poise and beauty," said Tahari, "that I decided that all of New York City should see them."

The group will be reunited in a few weeks for Macy's next exhibit. "I am so excited, I can hardly wait," exclaimed one of the models. Some of us were approached by agents, but we decided that we could make more of a statement appearing in a Macy's window than on the pages of a magazine."

Having previously modeled executive suits and dresses, Tahari has decided to branch into casual and swim wear. He himself said he will agree to pop inside one of the main windows, "to encourage the girls and make sure they don't stiffen."

Even though the deans at SCW aren't allowing these women to be exempt from classes, Sam Mandelbaum, SCW's very own Mr. fix-it, has managed to install a special hookup system so that students don't miss any class.

SCW Makes A Match For Tenzer Garden Flame

A group of SCW seniors majoring in sculpture have banded together for a little match making. They have molded a golden match to accompany the bronze flame which currently presides over Yeshiva College's Tenzer Gardens.

This concept, said to be totally unprovoked, was based on many visits to the walled garden. "The flame looked so lonely just sitting there looking at life passing it by," says head sculptor. It's just criminal to be stuck at YC without a date."

"The idea came to me like a flash of lightning," exclaimed one of the groups' artists. "Why not create a companion piece for the flame—something that will last and be on hand to ignite the flame should it ever extinguish."

The match, which sits alone in a secluded corner of the art room at Stern College, took an entire semester to complete. The gold itself, was donated through the selfless gestures of the artists and SCW students and faculty. MELT DOWN

Soon after the Flame's unveiling, these women called for a college-wide melt down of everyone's gold jewelry. "Everyone was surprisingly cooperative," said Ora Gluttner, president of SCWSC. "I personally donated my new chains and diamond ring to the cause. I am proud to be a part of that match."

Following Gluttner's shining example, hundreds of SCW students shed their jewels. Each class president was assigned a quota and was instructed to accept everything above 14 karat. Contributions of anything below 14 karat were collected for the match's pedestal.

The administration is reportedly quite touched by the gesture and has allowed special viewing hours for any Stern College student.

Iranian Terrorists Hold Philosophy Exams For Ransom

In a special undercover investigation, this reporter decided to get to the bottom of the case of the missing finals which were "stolen" last semester.

At 5:00 a.m. on the morning of the crime, Mrs. Sadie Slechtrzmechick reported to the police that she saw two young men wearing khaffiyehs lurking in the bushes adjoining hers and the professor's property.

Upon further questioning she added that they were carrying loaded uzis, riding unicycles and were dancing with pink flamingos. She also insisted that had her son taken out the garbage more often as a child he would not be married to a shiksa. The police disregarded her report because no one at the precinct could pronounce her name.

That same day, at 9:30 a.m., Mrs. Turkel received a threatening phone call from a mother of a girl who received a "C" on her biology quiz. According to a reliable source, Dean Bacon received a call at 10:30 a.m. from a man who would not identify himself. In a thick mediterranean accent, he informed the dean that the missing exams were in his possession and were currently being censored.

While the Dean wondered which exams he meant, he offered to return the exams in exchange for delectable cafeteria food and then apologized for letting his sense of humor get the best of him. His demands, he said, would be outlined in a letter sent that morning by his leader through inter-office mail. The following week a copy of this letter landed on the Dean's desk:

Attention SCW: The variety of philosophies outlined on these exams are camel dung. The Iranian Government, a product of Ruski Missiles Inc., is appalled that you spice your students to memorize odorous blasphemies. We demand: 1) the right to make demands 2) the West Bank and Gaza strip 3) and that the stolen computer terminal be returned to Zev Faritas immediately. May Allah drown you in heated spit!

Sy Syms Institutes Beauty Contest Instead of Board Elections

After eight months in existence, the new Sy Syms School of Business has decided to abolish student council elections for the upcoming school year. Instead, they have decided to institute a Sy Syms Beauty Contest, a more practical way to choose their new Board.

"This new rigorous selection will surely separate the girls from the women. It will allow the leader's true abilities to shine through."

All prospective candidates must submit five photos of themselves, a list of 10 major credit cards in their possession (Sears does not count) with a list of their 25 favorite designers by May 1 to the Canvassing Committee. Before being notified of their acceptance, all candidates must first be approved by the Stern College Student Council.

The top "10" candidates will be allowed to participate in the competition for the position of President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer of the SSSB. The competition will have two parts; first, all contestants will model the latest in swimwear at the new Yeshiva College pool. Evening wear will be modelled in the newly renovated nu-wave cafeteria. Most importantly, the contestants will model business suits up and down 34th street.

Second, the talent segment will include a quiz show entitled "Name that Designer." Candidates will also be required to show their proficiency in using the calculator for up to five minutes without breaking a nail.

Responsibilities of the newly elected board will include acting as covergirls for the orientation program and future Yeshiva University public relations. One winner will receive a new wardrobe courtesy of Tahari.

SCW student waits to board van because of a sudden rip in the mechitza.

Decrease in Moral Standards Brings About Mechitza Van

Despite renovation of Stern's library, Yeshiva College's facilities continue to be used heavily by the women of Stern College. However, concern expressed by the rabbis of Yeshiva University over a decline in moral standards, has brought a mechitza van into existence.

A special assembly of rabbis at the uptown campus voted on putting up a mechitza in the van transporting students of YU and from the two campuses. The final consensus, 10 to zero, was to put such a van into commission.

Renovations and blueprints for this new van started about a year ago. However, Jeff Rosengarten said that a desire for a state of the art air conditioning/heating unit had delayed construction. Mr. Rosengarten, in agreement with the administration, felt that the end result made the delays worthwhile.

Yeshiva University is proud to acknowledge its own maintenance men as responsible for the construction of the van. A generous gift from one of YU's patrons funded the material for the mechitza. Secretaries from uptown grouped together to sew the 100 foot long curtain.

The mechitza extends the length and height of the van. Embroidered in black are passages from Tehillim dealing with modesty. For example, on the women's side of the van are the famous quotes "the honour of a princess comes from inner modesty" and "walk modestly with God." On the men's side of the van are bookcases with gemaras and siddurim.

The Rabbis are concerned with the emphasis students seem to put on associating with members of the opposite sex. "Marriage is something positive. Dancing and movies are activities of frivolity which do not fit in with the message of Torah U'Madah YU is trying to present" one rabbi was quoted as saying.

It is hoped that the mixed use of the two campuses will drop significantly. However, the administration in recognition that men and women do need the company of the opposite sex have hired a shadchan as a service to the college. She will have her hours on the van between 7:00 p.m. and midnight.

Students are confused and shocked by this new mode of transportation. The general feeling is very negative.

"I didn't come to Stern to be treated like a seminary girl" said one student bitterly, "Where are my rights to talk to whomever I please whenever I please?"

"If I wanted a mechitza I could take the bus to Monsey," was another reaction.

Petitions are already being circulated. Students are bonding together in protest. A senior was quoted as saying "There is mutiny in the air." The Anti-Mechitza club has started with a membership of over 400 at Stern alone. Yellow fliers denouncing the van can be seen all over campus. Stern women are insulted by the mechitza.

"This is supposed to be a college, not a convent!"

Attempts have been made to tear down the mechitza. The administration, in anticipation of such action, have stationed two armed guards in the back of the van. "Torah is not to be tampered with," said one of the deans of YU. "We want to stop the decadence the University has been seeing. We mean business."

Ribbon Cutting Ceremony Held: Library Gets A New Doornob

Yet another ribbon cutting ceremony was held the other day at the newly renovated Hedi Steinberg library heralding the installation of a new doornob. No one knew about the ceremony because "we're the ones who made it happen" said one board member and "it's about time we had a share of the caviar."

Speeches were given and photographs were taken while a few students in the library struggled to study. "We photographed these people so we could show the outside how great it is for the women at Stern" mentioned one PR official.

Following the ceremony was wine, caviar and other foods arranged in the hall. This celebration was enjoyed by this small group while other students in the school tried in vain to find something normal to eat for dinner. Members of the Stern College Dramatic Society, however, were rehearsing for their upcoming production and were grateful for the left-overs.

.....And food was served.

Stern College Hires Much Sought After Salamon Rushdie To Teach Islamic History

World renowned Islamic Studies Expert, Salamon Rushdie, will teach a class on religious fanaticism in the 20th century: How to Successfully Speak out against it."

The class will trace the rise of Islam from the seventh century to the present day, and will deal with the ideology behind the religion. Students will be required to study Satanic Verses in depth.

Modern day commentators on the book such as the Ayatollah Khomeini and Cat Stevens will be studied thoroughly.

Course requirements include the reading of the Koran, and successful completion of a midterm, final and paper.

Deans Bacon and Orlian welcome Mr. Rushdie to the staff of SCW. "The time has come to speak out against the oppression of free speech in this country. Mr. Rushdie will be granted a teaching position and 24 hour security," said Dean Bacon. Dean Orlian urged students "to take the course to further their knowledge of history and modern English Literature."

The course, which is three credits, will fulfill a history or English requirement.

Professor Druyan is also enthusiastic about the course.

"The course will provide further insight into the Islamic religion and culture."

Mrs. Cohen, a Hebrew language teacher at SCW, will use the Hebrew translation of the Satanic Verses to teach Hebrew to her classes. "I feel it is important for students to read modern literature, especially such a controversial book!"

Beware Of The Kallah Zone

"Beware! You are now entering the Kallah zone." With kallahs in mind, the executive board, for the first time in Stern College history, has been evaluating door decorations for best original design.

"We thought this would be a good idea to inspire Freshmen to say 'yes' now before they lose their luster," explained one student council leader. "After four years of studying, sleepless nights and frozen dinners, guys will lose interest."

The winner will receive an all expense paid wedding for 150 guests at Stern's Louis Koch auditorium to be catered by Sam Kline and crew. The money apparently is a generous contribution from the newly elected Board of Directors.

In hopes of winning this grand prize, many doors have been plastered with "happy engagement" signs. Due to changing designs, maids have been reported to be in states of confusion and have had difficulty remembering which rooms they have cleaned.

Kallah zone

Doors have been completely covered with paper (possibly to hide the peeling paint cracks) in almost every material—construction paper, ribbons, cellophane, streamers, doilies and aluminum foil. To stand out, original quotes appear, such as "you're the YU star—at Harvard we'll really go far," and on one door is an original marriage proposal in letter form of Certified Public Accountants offering a "permanent position with the firm."

Some doors function as advertisements for various products; "There's nothing sweeter than the combination of M&Ms". One door has the wrappers of Reeses pieces and Hershey's milk chocolate kisses pasted on. Another claims it was the magic touch of Jolly Rancher candies; "Two years ago in Morasha you met, following Jolly Rancher candies all knew it was set." Yet another publicizes Lou G. Siegals in bold print. (Did the restaurant bribe them?)

Some students are on cloud nine and their doors reflect this. Some have huge silver stars and star-studded wrapping paper. In another, the stars and moon appear on the horizon with the bride and groom facing a chupah. Still another is covered with patches of cotton balls which read; "they're in heaven."

Door decor

Other doors have out of the ordinary paraphanelia such as a bride and groom from a magazine with their faces cut out, and replaced with the inserted faces of the engaged couple. "The farmer and the Southern belle" have a plastic horse on a stick taped onto the door called "broomtail." This comes with a tacked on black cowboy hat and parasol. One door has streamers framing the door like a curtain, while a racier door has a 'just engaged' sign printed on a drawing of a thunderbird.

After much thought and discussion, the board arrived at their decision. "This door caught my eye" says one board member; "nothing else compares in either color or smell." The winning door is actually cut into the shape of a heart and is doused with perfume.

The winner, Ahava Lovelorn of room 13U, expressed her excitement upon being notified; "Now my task at Stern is finally completed," she believes. Her fiancé, an early admissions freshman at YC, who wishes to remain nameless, is not enthusiastic about the grand prize. "Koch is not my ultimate dream hall, but since I spent so much money on dates, I'm glad I can save some now."

Speaking of money, The Koch is now booked for weddings for the next four years, and Sam Kline is radiating with joy. He was, however, recently taken to court by the president of Only Simchas (glatt kosher catering, videos, photography, balloons, and more) who has been losing business. Says the president of the company, "I paid heavily to have my card attached to one of those dorm doors."

Behind The Scenes At An SCW Student Council Meeting Minute By Minute...

Ora Gluttner, president of the Stern College Student Council

Batya Lovethatwhiskey, vice president of the Stern College Student Council

Sheri Neveranywhere, Treasurer

Sindy Straighter, Corresponding Secretary

Clever Heather, Recording secretary

Gluttner: Lets get down to business folks.

Straighter: Lovethatwhiskey, I need to give you dates for Broadway shows to fill in on the calendar.

Lovethatwhiskey: Speaking of dates, I just want to double check the date of your wedding so I can fill it in on the calendar. Mine is already marked down. Gluttner: June 14. Now lets start with this semester's budget allocations.

Clever Heather: What happened to all the budget allocation letters from last semester?

Gluttner: They never reached their destinations.

Lovethatwhiskey: I think I have copies of them somewhere, maybe.

Straighter: Great, now what about events for this semester?

Clever Heather: Why don't we

sponsor a trip to Atlantic City?

Lovethatwhiskey: Thhhat's a ggood idea.

Straighter: We couldn't take all those underage kids and watch them get carded at the casinos.

Stupid Council: No/Yes. (Burp)

Clever Heather: Speaking of trips, where are you guys going on your honeymoons?

Gluttner: I'm not sure, maybe California.

Lovethatwhiskey: Probably Mike's Pub

Straighter: Gluttner, I'm going to need some checks for the theaters. Also, what's happening with the Purim program?

Gluttner: I thought we could all go in costume.

Lovethatwhiskey: Thhat rre-minds mme, Did you get your wedding address yet Gluttner?

Gluttner: I ordered mine last week, but did you see the kippah I made for Aaron?

Clever Heather: Your color scheme is pink right?

Gluttner: If you hand me a magazine, I'll show you which shade we're getting the cumberbunds in.

Lovethatwhiskey: Which magazine do you want, you have a whole pile here.

Straighter: While you're looking for the magazines do you think you could look for the checkbook?

Lovethatwhiskey: My color scheme is lavender and silver.

Straighter: Did you guys order invitations yet?

Gluttner: Oh yes, hundreds.

Straighter: I mean for the Stupid Council dinner.

Gluttner: We have plenty of time for that. Could we please get back to my menu. I'm in a real bind!

Straighter: If I hear one more word about weddings I'm going to scream. This will not go on...

Stupid Council: Bag her already

Why not a black wedding?

SCWSC President Arrested On Charges Of Embezzlement

AASCWSC President Ora Ruttner has been arrested on charges of embezzlement, according to police spokesperson Moses Q. Blucorn.

Ruttner was arrested after an unidentified member of the SCWSC board reported to Ruttner's superiors that money which was supposed to be allotted to student groups had been mysteriously withdrawn from the account. There have also been large bills received from Moshe Peking, Cheers, Bloomingdales, and Chippendales, said the source.

Police believe there may be a connection between the missing money and these bills.

There have also been rumors that the 21-year-old economics major is a closet drinker and skirt chaser.

Mrs. Zeldia Braun, head of student services, says she is "appalled" at the accusation. "I am standing behind my S.C. President and I believe she has been instrumental in making this a kinder, gentler school."

Police believe Ruttner may have used the money to purchase the large cubic Zirconia that she wears on her left hand. "Students tell us that Ruttner likes to pretend she is engaged, we believe that no sane man would marry this girl" Ruttner has been seen publicly with a large man, somewhat resembling Winnie the Pooh. This man may have mafia connections, police say.

Ruttner, who is now being held without bail in the Stern

Cafeteria, claims the charges are totally false. The unexplained ring and the bills, she claims, are not hers. "As for the ring, it is up to me to set a good example for Stern students. For the good of the school's morale, I must appear engaged." When asked if

Malnourished SCW Students Convalesce At YC Cafeteria

Food service complaints were partially remedied recently by providing extra vans after 2:30 p.m. daily, which travel directly to the YC Cafeteria. The action came in response to the numerous SCW students who have recently died of starvation.

"It's a good idea," commented one SCW early admissions freshman on her way to the YC Caf. "This way, we can eat supper almost every day."

An anonymous spokesperson for SCW Food Services explained, "We decided to take action when some corpses were found in the Orange Lounge last week. Evidently, they had lost their money in the vending machines and died soon after."

The idea to provide extra van service came from none other than Commentator editor-in-chief Behnam Dayanim, who claimed that there "is no reason that girls should not be allowed on campus more often."

When asked if there would be other plans to update Food Services, the spokesperson was skeptical.

"Of course, the ultimate goal would be to provide food for SCW students. Unfortunately, finances are low as usual and the van service will have to do for now. After all," he added, "we have to pay for YC's new pool."

New Almanac To Explore Kallah Etiquette

Student Council is about to release a new publication on Kallah etiquette for those students who are engaged or those students just putting up with them.

Published by Professor Ivan Gettim, The Kallah's Almanac gives Kallahs helpful tips for dealing with their new status, and provides insightful solutions to harrying Kallah encounters for engaged women.

In an exclusive interview with The Observer, Stupid Council President, Ora Gluttner, revealed some helpful hints found in the book.

CONCERNING THE KALLAH'S RING:

If it's less than one karat, don't say things like:

"Is that just temporary?" or "I would never have settled for that, but"

If it's more than two karats don't say things like:

"I thought Prince Charles had a wife." or

"Is that an engagement ring or Michael Jackson's glove?" or

"Save some for the rest of us!"

DO'S AND DONT'S:

Remember, it's in poor taste to decorate your roommate's door with paper that says "Happy Chanukah" or "Get Well." Do ask where the wedding is, but by no means say things like, "My cousin had hers there, and she's still throwing up." Do ask when the wedding is to take place, just don't inadvertently invite yourself by saying things like, "Oh, the fifth? I'll definitely be in New York on the fifth." Always participate in congratulating a Kallah so that when you get engaged, you don't end up standing in the lobby with just your Choson throwing confetti on your head.

DON'T BE FLASHY: Don't flash your ring to the same girl twice within one hour. Don't wear hats to class. It's in poor taste and slightly premature. Don't accept locating devices, such as beepers from your choson. Let him cook for himself until you get married. Don't refer to yourself as Mrs.

terrorists. Included in the demands is a proposal to raise the tuition of the Stern College students. It is hoped that the additional money raised will help pay for the missing computer terminal. The other demands are being ignored because, as the administration reasons, "why should we take an old fanatic who lives thousands of miles away seriously anyway!"

Demo of new Express route.

New Express Route to Classes

Poles were installed from the eleventh floor of SCW down to the basement in response to overcrowded elevators. The poles were praised by faculty and students alike, who previously had always met with difficulties arriving in classes on time.

The poles, which are built through the staircases, are in constant use since their installation. Stern women are frequently spotted sliding down the poles and yelling, "Wheeeeeeeeee!"

In the basement, mattresses were provided for the sliding students, who previously had met with a thump upon arrival in the cafeteria via the pole.

As a result of the installation, pants were officially okayed and required for pole-sliders. Said Rabbi Kanarfogel, "Wearing skirts in such a situation certainly would not conform to the standards of tzniut."

Deli Owners Convert to Judaism

The three Korean people who own and operate the Deli located across the street from Brookdale Hall have recently decided to convert to Judaism.

In an exclusive interview they admitted "to being impressed with the caliber and spending abilities of the students at Stern College."

They also admitted to being much swayed by the YU ideal of Torah U'Mada and have pledged to live up to President Lamm's dream.

New Kosher Deli.

As a result, the much disputed tofutti machine will be kashered according to halacha, along with all utensils used for slicing and dicing fruits and vegetables. In addition, there will be a constant supply of Cholov Yisroel milk and cheeses.

On the home front, SCW's Milner's Market is reported to feel threatened by this sudden change and is in its beginning stages of bringing the charges of 'Who is A Jew' before the college's Senate.

The Senate will, however, be unable to convene until Spring 1995.

that means she is not really engaged miss Ruttner replied, "That is none of your (expletive) business."

Ruttner also claims the rumors of excessive drinking couldn't hold water. "Those who know me well can tell you the truth about that issue," Ruttner said.

But Ruttner's claims of innocence leave many unconvinced. Ira Jaskoll, Dean of Sy Syms Modeling Agency, said "I would expect such behavior of a member of SCWSC. You would never catch one of my girls doing such a thing" Jaskoll later added, "why should they embezzle? We give them twice the budget, and pay for their facials anyway."

After hearing of the charges against Ruttner, Dean Efreim Nulman said he was cutting off the funds to SCW that were to have paid for the planned swimming pool. "Let them swim in the East River," he said. Although he claimed he was in no position to comment on the rumored alcoholism, he said he wasn't surprised to find Ruttner had embezzled funds. "Just like a woman," said Nulman.

A Lot of Options

Just recently, Yeshiva University acquired the empty lot next door to the Midtown Center. Ever since the news was released, suggestions have been pouring in from the different factions of YU, on how to utilize the space optimally.

1. The Yeshiva College basketball coach felt that a second athletic center should be built for YC students. He reasoned that these boys need a place where they can go when once every three weeks their gym is being used for team basketball games.

2. The heads of T.A.C. (Torah Activities Council) felt that there should be a Kollel for girls who want to sit and learn.

3. The academic standards committee thought that there should be more classes/classrooms. They sent around a poll to Stern students. The result: 95% felt that there should be more humanities courses. The other 5% were divided between wanting more mathematics, chemistry and physics courses.

4. All Stern College students felt that more elevators should be installed.

5. The Torah U'Mada committee asked if they could store their "Think Tank" in the lot.

6. Burns' security force expressed their strong desire to place one of their sleeping guards there.

7. The YC students recommended that Stern students get their own plot of grass that they cannot walk on.

8. The residents of Morgenstern dorm asked that the official engagement party spot be moved so that they could get some sleep.

The best idea, however, was offered by one Rosh Yeshiva. He felt that the lot should be kept just as it is. "Zecher L'Churban."
