UP TO THE FACULTY

As Yeshiva's first year, a new student administration takes office. Behind the records and achievements of Yeshiva pioneers, men whose contributions to the institution have been felt more and more as the years passed on, ahead lies a year of perhaps the most records of new obstacles to be overcome, of new fields to be conquered.

The current and necessity of student interest and participation in the shaping of the future of Yeshiva is made self-evident by every phase of the present activities of the past. This has been of the most fundamental nature and has affected not only the basic concern of the institution, but also its basic philosophy.

Such a conception must be necessary to the construction of a number of existing conditions.

A committee of long standing and a constant source of friction between students and administration has recently been eradi- cated by the decision of the administration to turn over NYA appointments to the Faculty-Student Relations Committee. Despite the fact that this committee was continuously hampered in its work by lack of time, it was in charge of the organization of the positive merits of the various applicants for NYA appointments were recognized and decisions reached. General dissatisfaction has been expressed by the students body as regards the administration of the student body as regards appointment has at last been eliminated.

The institutional wisdom of this innovation, however, lies in the fact that it should mark the beginning of a general application of the faculty-student committee principles. Particularly should this be the final word in the related questions of suggestion and administration. The administration made no mention of past difficulties on the basis of the arbitrary decision of one or two people. Only after consultation in the administration, and after continued student protests was there set up a committee that might be successful. The question at last would have drawn up a careful

PARTITION WAITS

In the face of the recent resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Nations on England's plan to partition Palestine into Arab and Jewish states, the question of compromise is, that partition has been eliminated as a possibility. In the face of the demands for a Jewish homeland and the demands of justice, it is hoped that a peaceful solution can still be found. Meanwhile, the United Nations continues to study the problem.

The Zionist Congress

By Rabbi David D. Peterseh

The 20th Zionist Congress can be properly appreciated only if viewed against the background of the long-drawn-out political set-up and the strain of victories and defeats, failures, limitations of space, regret or impossibility for me, to attempt a comprehensive discussion of the events of the Congre. (If I can see none of my fellow-Small: smiling-effect sympathetically at this remembrance of my ancient malady. What follows can therefore not be considered either an accurate analysis of the Congress itself or a thorough review of the situation of the Eretz-Israel problem in the light of the resolutions passed.

The Congress met in an atmosphere of tension, anxiety, fear of failure and the need of that delicate operation. The Israeli people are on the very edge of action of a most dramatic nature. Those in Europe, who considered the problem painful, but necessary, the British law, the lack of a decision of the Jewish National Home, the National Home.

The problem with which the Congress was faced, is that of the future of Yeshiva. From those with whom the Congress has grappled: the future of the University, the Jewish people, the future of Zionism in the world.

The solution, however, is not a simple task. It is the task of the Congre. No warning words of inspiration or hope could dissipate this attitude.

For never before had so much been aimed at the heart of the Jewish people, at the very soul of Zionism. Efforts of the past two decades had been largely proved to have been in vain. The solution, therefore, by a majority of the Congress, regarding the partition of the land, it had, had, had always been the essential underlying of the Balfour Declaration, Royal Declaration, the fundamental principle of the Zionist Congress.

But the problem is not only a question of the land, it is a question of the future of the Jewish people. The solution, however, is not a simple task. It is the task of the Congre. No warning words of inspiration or hope could dissipate this attitude.

Alumni Jottings

The head of the milk-white, newly-touched complexion received its first Yeshiva champion when David W. Felcher '36 joined the graduate school of London University, where he is now studying under the eminent Prof.
H. Landy. Dave has had the honor of being the only delegate chosen to represent the Mirrachi of Can-da at the recent Zionist Congress in Zurich.

To get a first-hand glimpse of the land of his immediate ancestors went Moshe Feinstein '36 this summer. This also represented the first time Europe got a glimpse of Moshe. After all, Germany saw 11 years. Why shouldn't the rest of Europe benefit also?

Rabbi Karlin '37, Rabbi Katz 37, Rabbi Sive '37 and Rabbi Aaron Greenberg, with their Semicha's dating from the summer months, have joined 'em-bly the new graduate school of Yeshiva College.

Bill Kaufman '36 has paused in his tour of journalism schools long enough to plunk down a registration fee at Columbia School of Journalism. Somewhere in the expanse of Columbia U. he is likely to meet Irv Rieger '37 after an M. A. in history, or Bill Margolis '37 prowling among the test tubes.

Lester Silverman '37, the mystery man of the year, is learning the science of disarming suspicious patients with a pleasant cine.

Experiences of all kinds have been the lot of scores of our alumni since their graduation day. It is the purpose of The Commentator to endeavor to maintain contacts with all alumni and to follow their careers with interest. In addition Commentator plans to organize a service through which any alumni will receive the information necessary to communicate with a

To facilitate the functioning of such a service all alumni are requested to send in to the
