"The emancipation of any people must be by that people itself," declared Pierre Van Paassen, author of "The Forgotten Ally" and commentator on international affairs, at the National Conference of Orthodox Jews for Palestine and Rescue. The statement sounded the keynote for the conference held at the Hotel Pennsylvania Sunday and Monday, January 30-31 in deliberate ways and means of abrogating the White Paper, rescuing the remaining Jews of Europe, and attaining a Jewish Palestine.

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor,

Student organization faces many problems, but one which has been raised, and one which needs immediate solution, is the problem of the high officials in our college administration.

Recently, a student group has been formed to discuss these problems and to propose solutions. The group consists of students who are concerned about the college administration and its impact on student life.

We believe that the administration should be more responsive to student concerns and should take steps to address the issues raised by the student group.

Sincerely,

The Attitude Of The College Administration

Dear President,

I have been asked by the editors of The Commentator to write an article on the attitude of the college administration towards student affairs. I have been involved in several discussions with members of the administration, and I would like to share my observations with you.

The administration seems to have a positive attitude towards student affairs. They are responsive to student concerns and are willing to listen to student input. However, there are a few areas where improvement is needed.

Firstly, the administration does not seem to understand the importance of student organizations. They seem to view them as a nuisance and a hindrance to the smooth functioning of the college. This attitude is not conducive to a healthy learning environment.

Secondly, the administration does not seem to take student concerns seriously. They often respond with a dismissive attitude and do not provide adequate support and resources to address student issues.

I would like to suggest that the administration consider the following:

1. Increase the budget allocation for student organizations
2. Provide more training and support for student leaders
3. Ensure that student concerns are taken seriously and addressed in a timely manner

In conclusion, I believe that the college administration has a positive attitude towards student affairs. However, there is room for improvement, and I believe that by taking the steps I have suggested, the administration can create a more supportive and inclusive environment for all students.

Sincerely,

Editorial Notebook

The student leaders of the various departments of the institution, particularly those in some of the columns, have finally joined the hitherto dispersed forces and have had the students protest the inhuman White Paper in a mass assembly which was well-planned, well-organized, effective and impressive. We think, however, that the speakers could have been more judicious; we would have preferred a man of more clearly Zionic convictions.

But this is water under the bridge. Our aim now is to continue the campaign, with the same enthusiasm and energy, until thousands of letters will have been sent to Congress. To relax our efforts now is to nullify the entire effect of the assembly.

We are informed that the old faculty room on the fourth floor, main building, is being converted to a laboratory coop for Quan. chemistry students. Matter of fact, work has already been going on for a week.

Meanwhile, the gym has for a long time been in dire need of renovating and cleaning. We were given to understand that labor is scarce, etc.

What gives?

From day to day we feel more and more gratified and happy that Dr. Samuel Selvin was chosen to head the institution. Our association with the President has been a most cordial and pleasant one. He has not been stingy with his advice or help. He has always shown much kindness to the students. He has never lost his student opinion. He has evinced an eagerness to help the students solve their curricular and orientational problems.

By his actions, he has gained the friendship and confidence of the student body.

WIT'S END:

Atom's Apple

BY MAT ROSENBAUM

In the past, this column has never made a practice of pedantic insinuation. Even when we were dwelling on things we were not. It is a rare and welcome improvement in the periodical literature that we may now, in this column, be able to present our readers with a really worthwhile article. It is a true statement that it would be the end of wit not to recognize publicly the qualities of a man—though not being organic—have nevertheless made him worth writing about.

Although the man whom I shall proceed to crowly, verbally, has already been praised by his large following, it is our contention that it would be the end of wit not to recognize publicly the qualities of a man—though not being organic—have nevertheless made him worth writing about.

I may only sing the praises of this particular laurel deserving person without mentionning his name—for his modesty is such that were I to reveal his identity—like the voices of the last analysis he would decompose and disintegrate by elemental and compound—chemically speaking of course.

If therefore I refer in these stanzas of my private soul, to my own soul's soul—let it be understood that this very psychosom is paradysed in its essence since our hero is little unknown. His glory has spread so far, that the walls of our laboratories thunder their approval and bow down with reverent plasticity to this giant whom possess such abundant qualities of qualitative characteristic.

This is the quality of mercy to be bounteous when he permitted his students to have over their heads a few hour con animation. It is hard not to find a man of such sympathy and understanding for our student body.

Our hero definitely set his mark in this when it came, to grade the papers. There was only one mark which was below the average—the grade of eighty-seven per cent. The average score was thirty three and three fourths per cent. However, the kindness of this man was so overwhelming that he consented to mark on the curve—rather the significance.

The students of his classes respect him with such zeal, that when the walls of the room, they bow their heads in sanctimonious display. Here is a man who is looked up to by everyone in the building.

If there is ever a misunderstanding between a student and the administration, who is it that takes up for the student? Who is it that helps them find the office of energy into the ring in behalf of the fellow in agony? Who is it that has been the torch bearer of student government? Who is it that has encouraged the student newspaper to take up positions on vital topics? Who is it? Your guess as good as mine—P.S. There is No Hero.

Whenever we think of this particular laurel deserving person, our minds come to a standstill in awe inspiring appreciation. This is one man to whom the student body would do anything. His students would go through hell, fire and water for him—without complaint.

In all intellectual circles,

Orthodox Conference

Mr. Rabbi Zemach referred to the conflict on the part of Orthodox Jews to the principles of Judaism. The Right and the Left, for Palestine is the history of the Jewish people.

One of the most eagerly awaited speeches of the two day conference was that of Rabbi Van Paassen in the final session. After reviewing the events which led to the present war and declaring that the Jews are entitled to a state of Palestine primarily because of their creed which is anti-social to the doctrines of Judaism, he paid tribute to the Palestinian Jew, the "forbidden ally." "Without Palestine Jewry could not have advanced through.

Mr. Van Paassen concluded by stressing that the status of Palestine has been changed from one of austerity to co-habitation.
