Partagd Wins High Position
In Jewish Cultural Scheme

By Elia Mintz

Now in review is the picture of American Jewish life, the Hebrew Arts Council's latest venture to involve American Jews in an element that was, until recently, alien to the fabric of Jewish life in America. The council's aim is to introduce a new and significant element into the Jewish cultural scene in America.

The council's latest venture is a symposium on the theme of "Jewish Life in America," which will be held at the Hebrew Arts Center in New York City on November 11. The symposium will bring together leading Jewish scholars and writers to discuss the current state of Jewish life in America and to explore its future possibilities.

The symposium is part of a larger project, "Jewish Life in America," which is being carried out by the Hebrew Arts Center, a cultural organization based in New York City. The project seeks to bring together Jews from different backgrounds and perspectives to explore the rich and diverse cultural heritage of American Jewry.

The Hebrew Arts Center has a long history of promoting Jewish culture in America. Founded in 1922, the center has been a leader in the field of Jewish education and culture, offering a wide range of programs and events that aim to engage and inspire Jews of all ages.

The symposium is just one of the many events that the Hebrew Arts Center has organized in recent years. Other recent initiatives include a series of lectures and discussions on Jewish history and culture, as well as a series of concerts and performances that showcase the diversity of Jewish music and dance.

The Hebrew Arts Center's work is supported by a range of partners, including the Jewish Community Foundation of New York, the New York Community Trust, and the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs. The center's commitment to Jewish culture is evident in its mission statement, which states that it is "dedicated to the promotion of Jewish culture and education through the arts and humanities."

Basketball As A Barometer Of Student Spirit

by Sol Blumenthal

The story I am going to write could not win the Jerome Robbins price. (If he has too and for some people it will contain no message.) It happened many times in different settings, and could happen again.

One Tuesday evening during the '66 basketball season fourteen figures sat bundled around the tables at Fey's. Some were complaining about tomorrow's "chem" exam and others were speculating on the weather which had taken. Outside the snow was falling fast and furious, covering the city with a key layer, and the sub-zero winds whirled through the thoroughfare, blowing off hats and giving the least fortunate frost-bites. The basketballs, uniforms, and other equipment were piled in the corner, and the '66 edition of the Bears made last minute preparations for their trip to New Rochelle. At a signal from the captain they all arose, buttoned their overcoats, grabbed their handbags, took a deep breath of warm air, and silently filed out into the blizzard. There was a long trek to the Seventh Avenue subway, a never-ending ride to Grand Central station, a ten-minute train trip to New Rochelle, and a exhausting hike through snow covered fields, after which the variety found themselves at the gym of the opposition.

The Yeshiva College Hoosiers were taking practice lay-ups in view of 200 people who had come to see the New Rochelle team play. Suddenly there was thunderous applause and shouts of the opposition charged onto the court. It was an empty feeling to stand before so many people who were hoping to see them lose. It wouldn't be so bad if there were 500 followers back Washington Heights school who were hoping along with them, winning with them, losing with them, and always playing with them; yet as the opening whistle blew they felt they were not playing for their school, but rather because they loved the game and competition. They lost, and early Wednesday morning fourteen tired men returned to their homes with numb hands, wet feet, and a slightly Hampstead spirit.

"You know?" Garett, deciding to give his thumb a rest, lifted an insurgent eye from a well-read page and gazed at his full time companion, Motsh.

"What?"

"Who do you think?"

"Yez."

"We never win."

"This will change."

The point is this. As far as I'm concerned "Yeshiva" basketball players are the best in the world. Most college varieties live on the fat of athletic scholarships and study three hours a day. It takes real athletic forte, great love for athletic competition, and a great deal of school pride to go to a practice session or a tussle in Canarsie after eight hours of classes. Many a Mile swam during the night and wenches who for whom he is knocking himself out, but he keeps coming back for more.

It's your school, and your team. When you see the score of Yeshiva College listed in the New York Times, it isn't just another team; it's your alma-mater battling another school. The hypers of the black and-white are the best ballplayers that ever formed a basketball, and their school is the best in the country. In that frame of mind we can't lose, so let's get behind the team and give them something to fight for.

Ground Breaking

A major development in the field of education is the establishment of two new educational institutions to mold citizens capable of governing themselves. The education of our citizens is patently a Federal responsibility, he added.

Representative Klein, in an interview, said that the ground-breaking ceremony marks a significant occasion, "not only in the history of world Jewry, but in the history of the progress of man toward democratic freedom. We are properly alarmed by the existence of this native land of a strong spirit of bigotry; but we are cheered and heartened because the overwhelming majority of Americans reject and rebuff that bigotry."

"It is a tragic fact that nowhere today, except here in the Western Hemisphere, could a Jewish University be established in complete political and intellectual freedom, protected rather than smothered by the law in its pursuit of pure knowledge."

Dr. Margalith Declares Multiplicity of "Loom" to Students

Dr. Margalith in a lecture Monday afternoon, November 19, to the students of the department of political science at Hebrew College, stated that the world today is suffering from "insecurity". He emphasized that the world is not free according to any particular "looms", but that the "insecurities" of the parties involved have resulted in the division into two conflicting camps. A question and answer period was held in which current problems were discussed in the light of this hypothesis, followed his address.

Dr. Margalith, last summer, was elected a member of the American Society of International Law.

Mr. Toshiro has just returned from Mexico where he studied at the University of Mexico.
